Abstract

This presentation discusses the demographic developments that characterized Israel's education system between 2000 and 2022, focusing on transfers between the various educational streams (based on individual tracking of the ideological affiliations of educational institutions that pupils attended over the years). In the final part of the presentation, long-term population projections, which take into account transfers between educational streams, are compared to Israel's Central Bureau of Statistics' population projections, going from 2009 to 2059.
